Ana-Paula Portilla- paintings and text

I. The Mother's Void (Le Vide Maternel)

Painting:

"The Mother's Void" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Le Vide Maternel" (text by Ana-Paula Portilla)

voice: Célia Cukier

My other skin is the skin that belonged to a cow, black and white. It was a gift from my father, maybe the most important one, and which became my most beloved blanket. It's the certitude that accompanies me always, as one sees in cows. Patient beings with four stomachs that pass their lives grazing.

II. Semen (Semence)

Painting:

"Double sex takes a rest" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Semence" (text taken from Parmenides, Fragment 18)

voice: Alain Bancquart

When man and woman mingle the seeds of love That spring from their veins, a formative power Maintaining proper proportions, moulds well-formed bodies from this diverse blood. For if, when the seed is mingled, the forces therein clash And do not fuse into one; then cruelly Will they plague with double seed the sex of the offspring.

III. Gestation

Painting:

"Gestation" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Gestation" (text by Ana-Paula Portilla)

voice: Sophie Boulin

My other skin was born of the fact, perhaps simple, perhaps evident, but for that important: my admission that I've lived, as all do, in protecting my body from the exterior.

IV. Lactation

Paintings:

4."The double fountain" (oil on cow skin)

5."The milky way" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Lactation" (text by Ana-Paula Portilla)

voice: Sophie Boulin

I grew up among cows, female cows, those that give milk. Cows, always more cows. My other skin is hers, symbol of my childhood, filled with cows, calves, udders, and, of course, milk. Skin that sometimes is forgotten on me or in me. It's my intimacy that lives obstinately in peace.

V. Solitude

Paintings:

6."Peeking from behind the spine" (oil on wood & cow skin)

7."Defending one's own" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Solitude" (text taken from the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad/fourth Brahmana)

voice: Nicholas Isherwood

1. In the beginning this was Self alone, in the shape of a person (purusha). He looking round saw nothing but his Self. He first said, "This is I;" therefore he became I by name. Therefore even now, if a man is asked, he first says, "This is I," and then pronounces the other name which he may have. And because before (pûrva) all this, he (the Self) burnt down (ush) all evils, therefore he was a person (pur-usha). Verily he who knows this, burns down every one who tries to be before him.

2. He feared, and therefore anyone who is lonely fears. He thought, "As there is nothing but myself, why should I fear?" Thence his fear passed away. For what should he have feared? Verily fear arises from a second only.

3 But he felt no delight. Therefore a man who is lonely feels no delight. He wished for a second. He was so large as man and wife together. He then made this his Self to fall in two (pat), and thence arose husband (pati) and wife (patni). Therefore Yâgñavalkya said: "We two are thus (each of us) like half a shell." Therefore the void which was there, is filled by his wife. He embraced her, and men were born.

4. `She thought, "How can he embrace me, after having produced me from himself? I shall hide myself."

She then became a cow, the other became a bull and embraced her, and hence cows were born.

VI. Divinity (Divinité)

Painting:

"Divinity" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Divinité" (texts taken from Parmenides, Fragment 12)

voice: Alain Bancquart

For the narrower (rings) are filled with unmingled fire, And those next upon them with night, and a portion of flame is sent forth; In the midst of these is the goddess who steers all things; For she rules over hateful birth and union of all things, Sending female to mingle with male, and again conversely Male with female ...

VII. Living Skin (Peau Vivante)

Paintings:

9."The column" (oil on cow skin)

10."Thinking about falling" (oil on cow skin)

Music:

"Peau Vivante" (text by Ana-Paula Portilla)

voice: Ana-Paula Portilla

She lives in me

Cow, made human

You are the skin that lives in me

You remember and without lying

You leave my intimacy in peace

My other skin

White skin, black skin

Like consciousness

Clear

I recognize it as my skin

Green skin

Like another body

Takes

Grilled skin

That shows

That insinuates

Milk skin

That transforms

Nude, the cow and me

I carry you within me

Feminine, masculine cow

I cover myself with my other skin

"Mon Autre Peau"("My Other Skin")in its present version represents a triple collaboration: the original texts and images of Ana-Paula Portilla, the music of Gerard Pape, and the video animation of Anney Bonney. The work deals in word, sound and image with questions having to do with being and sexual identity--in particular, what it might mean to be a man or a woman today and how the two sexes try to relate, despite their intrinsic lack of a "natural", that is, biological sexual relation. Starting with texts of Ana-Paula Portilla and also taken from the Upanishads and Parmenides, seven meditations of these subjects were realized in sound using the human voice, spoken or sung (in French), and in image via Portilla's paintings onto cow hide. Anney Bonney then took the original installation one step further by filming and then animating Portilla's paintings. This is the world premiere of this new version which will ultimately be released on DVD.

Ana Paula Portilla was born in Mexico in 1971. She began her artistic studies at the National School for Plastic Arts of Mexico at the UNAM in 1991-1993 with professors Francisco Castro Lemero, Patricia Soriano, Herlinda Sanchez Laurel and Luis Nishisawa. At the same time, she took courses with Jorge Soto Curiel. She also studied art history and engraving from 1993 to 1995 at the Universidad Iberoamericana in Mexico City. From 1997 to 1998 she studied graphic design and multimedia at the Institut Supérieur de Communication (ISCOM Création) in Paris.

She attended the XVII and XVIII international Symposiums of Art History in 1993 and 1994 in Mexico, and the Silvestre Revueltas Colloquium in 1996.

In 1992 she worked in collaboration with Jorge Soto Curiel on the mural at the Natural Sciences Museum in Jalapa, Mexico, and in 1995 on the illustration of extinct plants at the UNAM's Botanical Museum in Mexico.

She taught prehistoric art in the Center for Music and Arts in Mexico in 1994, and from 1998 to 2000 she was professor of painting, drawing, calligraphy and sculpture at the Loisirs & Creation Workshop in Paris.

The group exhibitions where her work has been presented were: "From Art and its History" at the Universidad Iberoamericana in 1993; at the "Cultural week of the ITAM" in 1994; the "Cultural week of the Law Faculty" of the UNAM in 1994 and 1995; at the "Galerija Jan" in La Jolla, California from 1996 to 1997 and at the "Golden Pacific Arts Gallery" in San Diego, Ca. in 1997. At the "Salon des Artistes", Grand Palais, in the Tuileries Garden in Paris in 1998, and in the "Intimate" exhibition at the Agora Gallery, NY 2000.

Her individual exhibitions are: "And effectively, they find themselves" an interdisciplinary exhibit with poetry and music at the Salvador Novo Center in Mexico (1995); "InSolaciones", Madrid, Spain in 1996; "Personal Landscapes" at Jorge Soto's Studio, in Mexico City in 1999.

The world premiere of her exhibition with sound installation "Mon Autre Peau" (My Other Skin) which featured her paintings and texts, in collaboration with composer Gerard Pape, took place in the Galerie Lee in Paris in December 1999. The work was presented in a much expanded version at Engine 27 in New York City in January 2001.

Gerard Pape was born in Brooklyn, New York in 1955. He graduated with a B.A. in Psychology from Columbia University in 1976, while simultaneously beginning private composition lessons with David Winkler. He obtained a Ph.D.

in Clinical Psychology in 1982 from the University of Michigan, and continued private composition lessons with U-M music composition faculty members George Cacioppo and William Albright. Pape studied electronic music with George Wilson in the analog and digital studios of the University of Michigan.

Pape has composed more than 50 works for orchestra, chamber music, and electronic works for instruments, voice and/or tape. His music has been performed in numerous festivals in the USA, Canada, France, Italy, Germany, Spain, Austria, Greece, Roumania, Sweden, Australia, Mexico, Hong Kong and Japan and was presented in the International Computer Music Conference (ICMC) in Tokyo in 1993 and in Hong Kong in 1996. He has been granted ASCAP standard awards each year from 1992 through 2001.

Among his most important compositions is the work Feu Toujours Vivant for large orchestra and 4 sampler keyboards, commissioned by the electronic ensemble Art Zoyd and the National Orchestra of Lille, conducted by Jean-Claude Casadesus. After its world premiere in Lille, March 9, 1997, the work was replayed twice more, including in Paris.

Pape has written numerous psychoanalytic articles. A book of his literary works, including short stories, plays and poetry, was published in the USA in 1984. More recently, he has published articles on musical complexity, and on the music of Luigi Nono (published in Contemporary Music Review). He has written and lectured extensively on the subject of "Composing in the Continuum" and is currently editing a book on this subject called "Le Continuum" due out fall 2002 in Paris. He has recently published an article "Iannis Xenakis and the Real of Musical Composition" in the Computer Music Journal.

His discography consists of a monographic disc released in 1992 by Mode, including works played by the Arditti Quartet, the Prism Orchestra of New York, and William Albright. In September 1998, Mode released a second disc of Pape's work, performed by Arditti Quartet, Ensemble 2E2M, Ensemble Voxnova, saxophonist Daniel Kientzy, singer Nicholas Isherwood, Janet Pape, and flutist Cécile Daroux. Mode recently released a double cd anthology called "CCMIX Paris: Xenakis/UPIC/Continuum" that contains Pape's "Le Fleuve du Desir III" for string quartet and tape, as played by the Arditti Quartet.

Pape is working on an operatic project based on Antonin Artaud's play The Cenci and which involves a collaboration with the actor-director Michel de Maulne and his theater, Maison de la Poésie, located in Paris.

His most recent work "The Ecstasy of St. Theresa" for 9 singers and live electronics commissioned by the Donaueschingen Festival will be premiered in October 2002

Pape has directed Les Ateliers UPIC, recently renamed CCMIX (Center for the Composition of Music Iannis Xenakis) since 1991. This organisation is a computer music center located in Paris and is under the honorary presidency of Iannis Xenakis. Besides being a composer and director, he is a practicing Lacanian psychoanalyst.

Cat, Dog, Pie (8'00")

Philip Brownlee

While making this piece, I have been enthralled by my nineteen-month-old daughter's experimentation with language. Recognisable English words are freely mingled with a stream of idiosyncratic verbal utterance, and while meaning is often obscure to adult ears, patterns of words and sounds are repeated in a way that is clearly linguistic. The title of the piece is one of these patterns, which she uses frequently, and which I am still unable to translate.

To me, such playfulness suggests musical processes. Almost from birth, the toys which most held her attention were those which made sounds. In response to this, I had recorded a collection of the toys which had most fascinated her around the age of seven months. Nearly a year later, the sounds have finally accumulated into a musical shape. I can only dream of recapturing for myself the inventiveness of a young child, but the observation of the child's manipulation of sound and meaning leaves its traces in my work.

Philip Brownlee, born in 1971, is a composer and sonic artist based in Wellington, New Zealand. He is currently pursuing doctoral studies at Victoria University of Wellington, extending the role of timbre as a structural parameter in both instrumental and electroacoustic music through his own compositional practice. He is an artistic adviser of the contemporary music ensemble Stroma, and a founding member of the sonic art collective Amalgam, who are gaining notoriety in Wellington for their recontextualisation of musical performance.

Flame Head (9'00")

Joseph Waters - composer/DJ

Joel Bluestone - percussion

Flame Head (2001) is a duet for percussionist (vibraphone and Chinese gongs) and D.J. Rig. It is a humble tribute to Chango, the Orisha of thunder and lightning in the Cuban-based Santeria religion. The work is based on foundation rhythms of the music of the Yoruban people of Africa.

An active composer of acoustic, electro-acoustic and inter-disciplinary works, Joseph Waters belongs to the first generation of classical composers that grew up playing in rock bands. Many of his works explore live performance and electronics. The performance elements include traditional acoustic instruments from around the world, electronics, "live" experimental film scores and performance art. He is composing an on-going series of duets for solo virtuoso acoustic instrumentalist with live electronic accompaniment as well as works for ensembles of all sizes — chamber to symphonic. Currently he is Assistant Professor and Director of Electro-Acoustic and Media Composition at San Diego State University, USA, and artistic director of NWEAMO (North-West Electro-Acoustic Music Organization).

He has presented and performed his works in Russia (Alternativa Festival at Composer's Hall — Moscow Conservatory), China (International Computer Music Conference — Tsinghua University, Beijing), Spain (Festival Internacional de Musica da Cadiz — University of Cadiz), Hungary (Music of Our Century Festival — Budapest) and (International Summer Meeting of Electro-Acoustic Music — Nadasdy Castle, Sarvar), Mexico (Festival Internacional de Arte Sonoro — Mexico City) Hong Kong (Festival of Chinese Arts — Hong Kong Cultural Center), Cuba (International Computer Music Conference — Habana), Argentina (Ensemble Rosario — Rosario) and throughout the U.S.A. PH1 (10'00)

glimmer, speck, dot, aquatic, flap, rambling

amplify, augment, vapour, systemic, distend, snag, daub

PH1 is a work exploring synthesised sound. The material for the opening phrase of the piece was originally created by drawing envelopes to describe pitch, amplitude and phase parameters for sinusoidal resynthesis. This was done using the graphic based synthesis tool Metasynth. This material was then further transformed by a number of processes including filtering, analysis and resynthesis and granular synthesis. This provided me with a pallet of sounds to use in the work (and reject!) derived from a common source. The large scale formal structures of the work are in part derived from processes of mapping small scale events - ie sound envelopes to large scale structures. The very low frequency rhythmic pulses at the end of the work are also created from transformations of the source material and not imposed as a separate structure or element.

One of the inspirations for the piece was seeing the interplay of light on the glass panes of The Palm House in the Royal Botanic Gardens Sydney, which was the venue where the work was to be first performed. PH1 also exists as a version with digital video, consisting of gradual video transformations of the textures found in the glass panes of the old Palm House structure.

Jon Drummond is a Sydney based composer who creates works for a variety of media including electroacoustic, live electronics, interactive media, web and installation. In 2002 his music has been presented on the d>ART02 dLux media arts national sound program on Alchemy Radio SBS, Sound Spaces sonic art gallery part of the 5th Totally Huge New Music Festival Perth WA, on 4ZZZ Radio Brisbane and at the Darwin International Guitar Festival.

INTERMISSION

The Secret of P.P.P. (18'00")

Sibylle Pomorin

An electro-acoustic composition - a commission for Netherlands Programme Service, 2000 Live-version for 8 loudspeakers arranged in a circle

A major theme in my work since 1995 has been "The Voice" and, out of the voice, "Language" and it's intellectual uses: communication, national musical languages, music as a means of self expression etc.

From the start of this period, I had also wanted to create an abstract electro-acoustic composition, which built on, out of and around the human voice. The commission from NPS-Radio provided the opportunity to realise that ambition.

I developed this piece with the team from NPS, who made the appropriate equipment available to me, and especially with the composer and sound engineer Arno Peeters, who worked with me on and off throughout this project.

To attune myself and to help the team to imagine their way towards their co-creative role, I provided a series of verbal, visual and acoustic evocations including:

Gossamer, transparent, ethereal, floating, mysterious, steam, wreaths of myst, heavy snowflakes falling on a whitened landscape, rays of light, electricity, wind, flute-like melismas and glissandi, Tibetian bowls rubbed, the reverberation of a gong, the sound of a glasharmonica, high organ sounds and their overtones, flageolet, a shimmering murmur.

The singing of the Dutch soprano Jannie Pranger was to provide the building blocks out of which I intended to create the electro-acoustic arrangements. But, as I was working at the computer with the software offering me its vast variety of noises, I felt the need more and more to arrange the piece as musically as possible and to allow Jannie Pranger's voice to shine through.

So although I held to some extend to the preconditions I had set, in the end the composition turned out rather different to how, at the start, I had imagined it would. But perhaps the beauty of the thing is just there - that even the composer is sometimes surprised by what emerges.

*Sibylle Pomorin (1956) studied from 1975 until 1980 at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Münster, specialising in flute and saxophone. At the same time she played in chamber-ensembles and Jazz-groups for which she also composed.

She has toured, since 1983, with, among others, Peter Brötzmann, Joèlle Léandre, William Parker, Yosuke Yamashita, Chris Cutler, Conny Bauer.

In 1984/85, she studied composition under Ernst Bechert in Hamburg. She attended further courses and classes under Dieter Schnebel, John Tchicai, Alice Shields and Eliane Radigue.

She has initiated numerous ensembles and bands. Her music has been performed by herself and other interpreters throughout Europe and in Isreal, U.S.A, Argentinia and Australia.

Since 1986, Sibylle Pomorin has lived as a freelance musician and composer in Berlin.

She has received commissions for festivals, radio and theatre, various scholarships and awards as well as work/study visits to New York, Istanbul and Mexico. Lately she has received the first prize in the international competition „Soundscapes voor 2000" in Holland. Since 1994, she has worked in the electronic studios of the Columbia Princeton University in New York, the Center for Art and Media in Karlsruhe, the Technical University in Berlin and the Netherlands Programme Service in Hilversum. Most of her recent work has been chamber music, electro-acoustic music and works for radio. She has made seven records and CDs and she is featured in the film portrait „Neue Töne aus Berlin" by Carla Kilian (Bayerischer Rundfunk, March 1992).

Grid (18'30")

Ros Bandt

GRID, a sonic exploration of an industrial cylinder, the city link exhaust stack, South Melbourne.

Made on Sonic Solutions, Macintosh, commissioned by the Listening Room.

Grid is the 4th movement of the larger electroacoustic work STACK. The Architectural form of the exoskeleton cylinder has been a sonic shaper, at a variety of levels. The AutoCAD design of the cylinder by the designer and architects Bo Bendtsen and Wood and Marsh was translated into a compositional score, defining elements of duration and repetition. Sections of the actual steel of the scaffold, and the exoskeleton of the cylinder became sound sources for extensive computer treatment and alteration. A variety of contact and ambient mikes were used in the field recordings which then underwent extensive treatment in the ABC studios. The City Link pollutant cylinder was sounded before it became irrevocably silenced the moment the city link tunnel opened and the extractor fans, upon activation, become silenced with rooms of acoustic baffles. It is a sounding of an ephemeral acoustic space which was silenced at the moment of birth.

Diffusion: cylindrical speaker array in fixed position simulating listening inside the cylinder as architecture.

Ros Bandt is an internationally acclaimed sound artist, composer, researcher and scholar. Since 1977 she has pioneered interactive sound installations, sound sculptures, created sound playgrounds, spatial music systems and some 40 sound installations worldwide. She has curated many sound performances, exhibitions and events. Her original works are recorded on New Albion Records USA, Move Records , Melbourne and EMI/ABC, and Wergo Germany. In 1990 she won the Don Banks Composers Award, being the first woman to do so. Other awards include the inaugural Benjamin Cohen peace prize in the USA and the Sound Art Australia Prize also funded by the ABC and the Goethe Institute. She has been commissioned by the Paris Autumn festival, the Studio of Acoustic Art, WDR, Cologne, Transit and ORF Vienna and been one of the Six exquisites in the International sound art festival in The USA. Her prolific writings include three books on sounding artworks, and some 40 articles. She is honorary senior research fellow at the Australian Centre, the University of Melbourne.
