Keynote Performer

I Can Be There

Brad Garton
Professor of Music
Director of Computer Music Center
Columbia University
New York City
USA
brad@music.columbia.edu

Abstract

The early notion of the Internet nurturing the growth of trans-geographical "communities" that could replace traditional local human social groups hasn't quite worked in the naive way initially imagined. However, aspects of the Internet have allowed the development of new kinds of communal activity, leading to new forms of shared social bonding. This "keynote event" will describe and demonstrate unanticipated characteristics of these alternative social networks, particularly as they relate to artistic production and creative imagination.